

Food Inflation Study

Food inflation rate:

$$\text{Inflation Rate} = \left(\frac{\text{Current Food Price Index} - \text{Base Food Price Index}}{\text{Base Food Price Index}} \right) \times 100$$

R Markdown

This is an R Markdown document. Markdown is a simple formatting syntax for authoring HTML, PDF, and MS Word documents. For more details on using R Markdown see <http://rmarkdown.rstudio.com>.

In this R document I will be specifically just cleaning data and correlating data points that are relevant to modeling, looking at the distribution of the data and saving those back to a new CSV file to be visually assessed in Python and modeled in R.

Below is the loaded CSV files needed to start cleaning for modeling and analysis work. The link to get the food inflation information is <https://microdata.worldbank.org/index.php/catalog/4483> from December 2019 to December 2023 to complete 4 years of data on international food inflation. “Monthly food price estimates by product and market 25 countries, 1353 markets, 2007/01/01-2023/12/01, version 2023/12/11” -The World Bank of Microdata website. There are two other factors in the analysis work, that is conflict (gun violence and war) and the US stock Market prices from December 2019 to December 2023.

The current HO: “The occurrence of conflict in key food-producing regions, coupled with fluctuations in the US stock market, significantly influences international food inflation rates. Higher instances of conflict and volatility in the US stock market are expected to correlate with increased food inflation on a global scale.” The current Alternative HO : “The impact of conflict and US stock market fluctuations on international food inflation rates may not exhibit a significant correlation.”

Food inflation data
food_data <- read.csv("Food_inflation_2019_2023.csv", header=TRUE, sep=",")
time to clean this up clean_food_data <- subset(food_data, select = -X) clean_food_data <- na.omit(clean_food_data) clean_food_data <- subset(clean_food_data, select = -Market) clean_food_data <- subset(clean_food_data, select = -Currency)
#fix the date
clean_food_data$Date <- as.Date(clean_food_data$Date, format = "%Y-%m-%d")

Narrowing down the top most conflicted countries in the past 4 years according to Wikipedia https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_ongoing_armed_conflicts sited. Mexico, Ukraine, Afghanistan, Syria (Syrian Arab Republic), Ethiopia, Yemen Out of those listed I found 3 in the data set to work with.

conflicted_countries_food_data <- clean_food_data %>%
  filter(Country %in% c("Afghanistan", "Syrian Arab Republic", "Yemen, Rep.))

conflicted_countries_food_data <- conflicted_countries_food_data %>% filter(Open != 0 & Close != 0 & High != 0) conflicted_countries_food_data <- na.omit(conflicted_countries_food_data[c("Open", "Close")])

#Isolate Food Price Index

Afghanistan data on Food Inflation open and close, the difference between the two. Its important to look at the distribution of the data to do further analysis and cleaning of the data. If the differences between open and close prices themselves follow a normal distribution, it could suggest a certain level of regularity and randomness in price movements.

Combined Histogram

In financial markets, a normal distribution of price index differences might support the idea of market efficiency, suggesting that market prices reflect all available information, and arbitrage opportunities might be limited. Furthermore, the questioning factor still remains that the open and close histograms are right skewed, which indicate otherwise. Its considered a bullish market indication.

I recalculated the index values to hold true to the individual products that we are using instead of using the “basket f goods” price index listed above in the original data set. I need to have strong comparisons per region to fully understand inflation in conflicted areas.

Similarly after looking at Afghanistan we want to do the the same thing for the other two countries. This is just to look at how the data is distributed in the market per country out of the three different countries that we are evaluating. Below we will evaluate the Syrian Arab Republic data, leaving Yemen last. I am trying to break this down so you can follow along regardless of your background. The coolest thing I have learned in College about being intelligent or being able to interpret data... is that its pointless if you can explain it well enough for anyone else to understand.

Below is the conflict data which is from <https://acleddata.com/data-export-tool/>. This requires a access key to get this data, it seems to be the most up to date data on conflicts. That coincides with the Dates from the Food inflation.

Below is the the US Stock Market Data which is from <https://www.ers.usda.gov/data-products/wheat-data/> and Yahoo Stocks for rought rice <https://finance.yahoo.com/quote/ZR%3DF/history?period1=1575158400&period2=1703030400&interval=1d&filter=history&frequency=1d&includeAdjustedClose=true>. With US Stocks.. need the names of each actual stock that dominates these regions to represent the coefficients of wheat which is my target data. It would essentially look like this: wheat = target, samples = [wheat company 1, wheat company 2, wheat company 3, wheat company 4] with all of the open and close data listed in the US stock markets. Then I will find which coefficients or features are significant in the target data of wheat in that country. You take wheat data from that country in the above Food_inflation_2019_2023.csv that is loaded and that is the target, then building out a data set of different companies of wheat in the US stock market to create the other half of the data. I learned how to do this between Advanced Statistics and Machine Learning. Its kind of important when looking at Linear Regression Models.
